ABSTRACT

This document presents data on student expenses at collees and other postsecondary educational institutions. Data were collected from the Parents' Confidential Statement (PCS) and the Student's Financial Statement (SFS), two information forms of the College Scholarship Service (CSS). Data on costs on more than 2,000 institutions were provided by the institutions themselves. An analysis of the data revealed several findings: (1) Major differences in expenses at the various types of institutions can be traced to differences in tuition and other fees. (2) Budgets for commuters are generally lower than for residents. (3) Tuition and other fees average only 12% of commuting students' budgets at 2-year public institutions and as much as 63% of commuting students budgets at private 4-year institutions. (4) Expenses have increased over the last 3 years at all types of institutions. (Author/MJM)

The College Scholarship Service (CSS) is an activity of the College Entrance Examination Board, concerned with improving equal educational opportunity. The CSS through the determination of financial need assists in the equitable distribution of financial assistance to students. Its services are offered to students and their parents, to secondary schools, to noncollegiate sponsors of financial aid programs, and to all institutions of postsecondary education. Operational activities for the College Scholarship Service are performed by Educational Testing Service.

The College Entrance Examination Board is a nonprofit membership organization that provides tests and other educational services for students, schools, and colleges. The membership is composed of more than 2,000 colleges, schools, school systems, and education associations.

Copies of this book can be ordered from Publications Order Office, College Entrance Examination Board, Box 592, Princeton, New Jersey 08540. The price is $2.

Institutions' estimates of student expenses. 1

INTRODUCTION

Each year the College Scholarship Service provides postsecondary institutions, state programs, and other users of the CSS need analysis services with information to assist the educational community in the equitable distribution of student financial assistance funds. This booklet presents data on student expenses at colleges and other postsecondary educational institutions.

For the first time the CSS is making this publication available to the secondary school community to aid in its effort to inform students of the average costs at various postsecondary institutions. Data on costs at more than 2,000 institutions are included. The cost figures listed here were provided by the institutions themselves and are used by the CSS in computing a student's financial need. It should be stressed that these are each college's average student expenses, and those for any individual student at the college may be quite different from the average. However, students may find some of the figures helpful in completing the budget section of the CSS publication, Meeting College Costs in 1973-74 (page 2), which assists students in determining how much they can afford to pay toward postsecondary expenses and thus whether they should apply for assistance at particular institutions.

The responsibility for meeting postsecondary education costs is shared among the student; his parents; institutions; gifts from individuals, corporations, and foundations; and financial aid programs of the various levels of government. This pattern of financing reflects the philosophy that education benefits both the individual and the society. The financial assistance that is provided to students is intended to enable them to acquire the kind of education that will meet their individual needs. Students who lack the necessary resources for postsecondary education should have the best chance of attending the institution of their choice if they are fully informed about costs and the availability of financial aid.

The information listed on pages 1-91 of this booklet was collected by the CSS for use in processing two CSS information forms, the Parents' Confidential Statement (PCS) and the Student's Financial Statement (SFS). Information supplied on these forms, combined with the data on average expenses listed here, is used to estimate how much financial aid, if any, a student would need at a particular college. Under the CSS need analysis system, an estimate of how much a student and his parents can pay toward his college expense is subtracted from the budget provided by the institution, and the difference is the amount reported to the institution as the student's estimated financial need.

A by-product of the collection of data on average student budgets from the institutions is the opportunity to analyze and observe trends from year to year and to compare the data on costs at different types of institutions, as well as to provide this listing of average expenses for resident students, commuters, and self-supporting students. For this new booklet, a general description and an analysis of college costs, based on statistics for the 1972-73 academic year, are provided, as well as an overview of the changes in student expenses over the past several years. This information is meant to be useful not only in the consideration of the pattern of current costs but also in forecasting future costs of postsecondary education.

INVESTIGATING COSTS: THE FIRST STEP IN FINANCIAL PLANNING

For the past several years, great emphasis has been placed on the objective of equal opportunity for postsecondary education. This was a leading theme of the recent legislation authorizing educational expenditures. The higher education provisions of the Education Amendments of 1972 cite as their primary purpose "to assist in making available the benefits of postsecondary education to qualified students in institutions of higher education."

The realization of this objective of advanced education for many students is contingent upon their receiving financial aid with which to meet their various expenses at postsecondary institutions. A student's need for financial aid is related to several factors: the expenses associated with attendance at particular institutions, his own resources, and what his parents can afford to pay. This publication focuses on the first of these factors.

One major item of expense at most institutions is tuition. While the actual costs to institutions for a student's education vary according to curriculum, academic level, and quality of instruction offered, the actual tuition charge to the student is more closely related to the type of institution he is attending: public, private nonprofit, or proprietary. As a rule, public institutions offer education at the lowest prices. Private nonprofit institutions also price education below the real costs to them, but their tuition charge is still likely to be considerably higher than for public institutions. Proprietary schools set their prices to cover all expenses. In addition to tuition, a student must also consider the cost of room, board, books, supplies, transportation, and such personal expenses as clothes, laundry, and recreation.

DEFINITION OF DATA USED FOR THIS DISCUSSION

The figures used as a basis for this discussion of the costs of postsecondary education are those supplied by institutions that submitted budget information to the CSS for the 1972-73 academic year. There are data from 446 two-year public institutions, 431 four-year public institutions, 154 two-year private nonprofit institutions, and 969 four-year private nonprofit institutions. A request for the information was sent to institutions in August 1972, but all changes reported to the CSS up to February 1973 have been included in the listing in this booklet.

ANALYSIS OF INFORMATION

A review of the data reveals several findings of general interest for discussion here:

- Major differences in expenses at the various types of institutions can be traced to differences in tuition and other fees.
- Budgets for commuters are generally lower than for residents.
- Tuition and other fees average only 12 percent of commuting students' budgets at two-year public institutions and as much as 63 percent of commuting students' budgets at private four-year institutions.
- Expenses have increased over the last three years at all types of institutions.

DIFFERENCES IN AVERAGE EXPENSES

Figure A shows that on the average it costs a first-year resident student less to attend a public four-year institution, the least costly, than to attend either a two-year or a four-year private institution. The major source of the difference is in the category of tuition and fees, which are almost four times higher at the private four-year institution. Room and board for resident students is generally similar in different types of institutions, as are other expenses.

The most costly of the three types of institutions for which data are provided here are the private four-year institutions. As is true of the private two-year institutions, the greater cost is primarily the result of higher tuition and other fees. Tuition accounts for 53 percent of the total average budget for private four-year colleges, compared to 23 percent for tuition at four-year public institutions.

COMMUTERS' BUDGETS VS. RESIDENTS' BUDGETS

Figure B shows that the basic progression of expenses for commuting students at the different types of institutions is consistent with those for resident students although the total resident budgets are higher. However, "other expenses" in commuter budgets is generally higher, probably because of daily transportation costs, although no determination of this factor was possible in the analysis. The difference in cost between the resident budget and the commuter budget ranges from $225 for the public four-year institution (11.3 percent less than the resident budget) to $535 for the private four-year institution (16.3 percent less than the resident budget). These budget figures show that on the average students who commute to college spend 12-18 percent less than those who live on campus. However, it should be noted again that transportation is not itemized separately in these data, and it can vary greatly among both commuting and resident students.

Figure C illustrates that on the average tuition and fees make up the smallest part of students' total budgets in public four-year institutions and the greatest part in private four-year institutions. At private institutions the largest percentage for both commuter and resident students is for tuition and fees, but at public four-year institutions the largest part of the resident student's dollar is spent on room and board, and of the commuter student's for both two-year and four-year institutions in the category called "other expenses."

COSTS ARE INCREASING

How do the costs for 1972-73 compare with costs for previous years? Table 1 shows that the total costs of attendance for both resident and commuter students in public and private institutions has increased over the last three years. The average budget for commuter students in public two-year colleges has increased $109 (7.1 percent) over the past year and $205 (14.3 percent) over the past two years. In public four-year institutions, the average resident budget has increased $110 or 5.9 percent over the past year, $202 (11.3 percent) over the past two years; and the average commuter budget has increased $101 (6.1 percent) over the past year and $229 (15.0 percent) over the past two years.

Private two-year	97 (4.9%)	256 (14.0%)
Private four-year	146 (5.6%)	363 (15.3%)

* Insufficient data.

The smallest increase has occurred in the private two-year resident budget: $56 (2.3 percent) over the past year, $160 (6.7 percent) over the past two years. The commuter budget at private two-year institutions has increased $97 (4.9 percent) over the past year and $256 (14.0 percent) over the past two years. At private four-year institutions resident and commuter budgets have increased $109 (3.4 percent) and $146 (5.6 percent) respectively over the last year and $306 (10.3 percent) and $363 (15.3 percent) respectively over the last two years.

This analysis indicates that the average resident budget has increased by approximately $100 over the last year and by $200 to $300 over the last two years. The average commuter budget has seen a similar increase, $100 to $150 over the last year, $200 to $350 over the last two years. Where are these increases to be found? In the public four-year institution, the increase in the budget for 1972-73 has been evenly spread over the major expense categories, but over the past two years the tuition and fees category has increased at a greater rate than other components of the budget. Similarly, the two-year increase in the resident budgets at private four-year institutions is concentrated in tuition and fees.

Table 2 shows that the greatest percentage increases in the different expense categories are occurring at the public four-year institutions. However, the actual dollar increase, while largest at the public four-year college for the one-year period, is greatest at the private four-year institution for the two-year period ($306). The rise at the private college is attributable to an increase in tuition and fees of 13.7 percent.

Table 3 shows the amounts and percentages of increases for commuter students. The commuter budget at public four-year colleges increased by about $100 over the last year, $230 over the past two years. Average commuter budgets also increased at private four-year institutions by $145 and $350 for the last one and two years respectively.

ESTIMATING TWO-YEAR AND FOUR-YEAR BUDGETS

The information provided by institutions to the CSS shows that educational costs are rising each year. For the student planning to attend a postsecondary institution, the question is how much he will require during the period of his enrollment. The data here show that the average commuter budget in public two-year colleges has increased at an annual rate of about 7.1 percent; in private two-year institutions the rate is about 2.8 percent per year for residents and about 5.9 percent for commuters. In public four-year institutions, the rate is about 5.8 percent for residents, 6.8 percent for commuters. In private four-year institutions, the rate is about 4.2 percent for residents and 6.6 percent for commuters.

The rates in Table 4 were developed to assist in predicting trends in costs for different types of institutions. They are based on data from a three-year period (1970-71, 1971-72, 1972-73). To estimate the potential average two-year or four-year cost at a particular type of institution, the total average cost (from Figure A or Figure B) should be multiplied by the appropriate ratio in Table 4. Such estimates are based on the assumption that costs will continue to rise at the average rate of the period 1970-73. It should be emphasized that estimates obtained this way are average figures for general types of institutions and that figures for individual institutions within these types would vary greatly.

Table 4. Rates for estimating total potential costs for the two-year and four-year periods at different types of colleges

Public four-year	4.25	4.30
Private two-year	2.06	2.12
Private four-year	4.18	4.29

* Insufficient data

For example, if the average total resident budget for private two-year institutions is $2,540 for 1972-73, then the estimated total budget for two years is $5,232 [$2,540 (1972-73 cost from Figure A) X 2.06 (from Table 4)]. This represents the estimated total cost for attending this type of institution for the next two years, considering probable increases during that time. The average total budget costs for four-year institutions can also be estimated using this method.

The data in this publication reflect the expenses of undergraduate students who are being supported primarily by their parents. It is planned to report more information in future years about the expenses of self-supporting students. Listed at the right is a breakdown of the components of an average 12-month budget for a single student, based on expenses submitted to the CSS by self-supporting students who filed the Student's Financial Statement as applicants for financial aid.

EXPLANATIONS AND DEFINITIONS

Institutions that completed a form sent to them by the CSS ("College Estimate of Student Expenses") for the 1972-73 or 1973-74 academic year are included in this publication. An asterisk (*) indicates that the cost figures are for 1972-73. These figures are used only if an institution had not submitted 1973-74 cost figures as of February 1973. Institutions whose cost figures were not updated for 1972-73 or 1973-74 do not appear.

Tuition and fees: Tuition and other general fees charged to all students. For public institutions there may be an additional charge for students from other states or districts which is not included in this figure.

Resident room and board: Average charges for rent and meals for students maintaining a residence apart from their parents, as in a residence hall, a fraternity house, or off-campus housing.

Resident other expenses: Average expenditures for books, supplies, personal and incidental expenses, and transportation. For students living away from home, the transportation item is defined as the average cost of two round trips between the students' homes and the institution.

Resident total budget: The total of all expenses: tuition and fees, room and board, and other expenses as supplied by the institution for resident students.

Commuter total budget: The total of all expenses for tuition and fees (for public institutions the in-state charge is used), books and supplies, personal and incidental expenses, and transportation as reported by the institution for commuting students. Some institutions have included the costs of rent and meals at home, while others have excluded the costs to the family if the student lives at home and considered only the direct cost of meals the student has away from home. Commuting students are those who live at home and travel back and forth to college daily.

Total 12-month self-supporting budget: The total of all expenses for a single self-supporting student. These include direct educational expenses such as tuition and fees, books and supplies, transportation, and the costs of living such as rent, food, and personal and incidental expenses. In the case of a public college, the tuition and fees that are included are those for residents of the same state or district.

Optimum PCS filing date: The date by which the institution suggests that the student send the Parents' Confidential Statement to the CSS for analysis. This date is provided to insure adequate time for review and for award decisions to be made. It should not be interpreted as a deadline date, for colleges may review PCSs filed with the CSS after this date. This date may also differ from deadline dates for financial aid applications, which are published by most institutions in their catalog or financial aid publication.

PCS--Parents' Confidential Statement: A form designed by the CSS to collect information on a family's financial circumstances for primarily dependent students. The information is used in determining the family's ability to pay for college costs.

SFS--Student's Financial Statement: A form intended for students who are primarily self-supporting. The financial information collected on this form is used in estimating a student's resources and expenses.

CSS--College Scholarship Service: An activity of the College Entrance Examination Board concerned with improving educational opportunity. Through its analysis of information provided on the PCS and SFS, it assists institutions in the equitable distribution of financial aid.
